

With Parental Care

One day in early September Juche 61 (1972), President Kim Il Sung saw the samples of padded jackets of different shapes and different colours.

They were made according to the sample padded jackets which he had personally sent to clothe all the children and pupils across the country with this type of jacket.

That day he was very satisfied with the finished products.

But while seeing the jackets for kindergartener, he said that the bottom edges of sleeves should be attached with ribbing, adding that it would make the jackets look better and prevent snow from going inside the sleeves.

The officials were moved by the warm affection of the leader who was concerning himself with such a minor thing lest even a little cold wind would penetrate the clothes the children would wear.

Later he acquainted himself with the production of the jackets several times every day, resolving all the problems arising in their production.

The Korean people lived under such warm care.